Being the birthplace of an industry in which almost all the major developments that have taken place and are impacting almost everyone have taken place in this country; the US is the world's leader in software and IT, developing, consuming and exporting the world's most advanced systems. The global IT industry is estimated at close to $ 4 trillion annually, of which the US alone makes up well over 25 percent. This shows the industry as being one of whopping figures. One in fourteen dollars produced in the US economy comes from this sector, while an eighth of the entire workforce is taken up by this industry and its supporting and ancillary industries. There is a huge number of organizations that are involved in the business –over 100,000. Of these, all but just one percent is classified under small industries, which by definition is one that employs lesser than 500 people. This spread and structure is paradoxical, considering that the industry is talked about in gargantuan numbers and volumes. Given the inseparability of technology from the digital economy; the US technology market seems to be steady itself for the next wave of change that is set to sweep it: Internet of Things and Big Data. These are disruptive trends, whose magnitude is yet to sink in into the industry. These, along with SaaS and cloud data storage, will be the defining shifts in the industry in the years to come. It is difficult to envisage the speed and extent of change that these new trends will bring in. This makes the need for equipping oneself with the required trends and disruptions all the more important and necessary. It is in the backdrop of this situation that NetZealous LLC positions itself as a valuable provider of professional changes that will help the players of this industry come to terms with the enormous changes coming its way.
